KANSAS CITY DAYLILY GARDEN

7728 Holmes Street

Kansas City 10, Missouri

Below are excerpts from a few of the many kind letters received from our customers. These letters made us very happy, as it is always our aim to try to more than please our valued customers.

We were very pleased with the prompt and courteous service you gave us on our Daylily order. The stock was beautiful and certainly generous. -- MINNESOTA

I received my order of Daylilies yesterday and to say that I was pleased is putting it mildly. I had sent 4 other orders and your order was much the best and I had never received a free one before, so I shall surely recommend your Daylilies to everyone. ----- OHIO

I received my Daylilies. They are lovely plants. I am very pleased with my gift. ----- MISSOURI

The plants arrived in fine condition. Thank you so much for the extra plants. I set them out immediately. I enjoyed your city so much and am so fond of my Daylilies from you. ----- TEXAS

I received my lilies today. The plants are lovely. ----- ARKANSAS

I want to thank you for the excellent plants sent to fill my recent order. They arrived in perfect condition and the extra generous plants were also appreciated. ----- SOUTH CAROLINA

Wish to write you a note to thank you for the prompt service and for the fine large vigorous plants you sent me. ----- OKLAHOMA

I wish to thank you for the very good plants that were so nicely packed, also for the extra's. I will be pleased to have your future list. ----- MICHIGAN

Received my order of Daylilies last Friday and was very pleased with your plants. They reached me in excellent condition. As usual I put them in water over night and plant early in the next morning. Had a good rain that night and I do believe I can say they are growing. ----- ALABAMA

THE TRUTH ABOUT DAYLILIES AND IMPORTANT CULTURAL DIRECTIONS

If you are a flower grower and want an abundance of blooms, if you want a perennial that is very hardy, and needs very little care, choose the Daylily. Daylilies do not require spraying for insects or diseases. They don't require digging or storing for winter. Winter protection is not necessary.

It is important that Daylilies be planted as early as possible in the season so that they can become established before winter. In some sections of the country, especially where heaving and thawing is a problem, many shallow rooted plants are heaved out of the earth and the crowns frozen and killed. This is because they do not have deep enough roots to anchor them in. The Daylily if planted too late may not be able to grow enough roots to anchor them, and in this event they might also heave. If Daylilies are planted within 2 months of your frost date it is advisable as an extra precaution to mulch with some hay, excelsior, or other loose material. After the first winter this will not be necessary, as the Daylilies will, by the second winter be well rooted and anchored in. We lose very few late divided plants here and yet we don't mulch, but mulching is good insurance the first winter.

Plant the crowns of the Daylilies, 1 inch below the surface, the crown is where the root joins the foliage.

Plant Daylilies where drainage is good, and any good garden soil is ok. Daylilies will grow in sandy or clay soil but is happier in a loamy type.

A cup of bonemeal with a shovelful of rotted manure or compost mixed in soil before planting is a good fertilizer for Daylilies.

Daylilies like lots of moisture when they are blooming, and will bloom better and make nicer clumps if given water when it is dry. As you know plants are composed mainly of water, but Daylilies are about as drought resistant as the cactus if water is not supplied, and in most all cases bloom and grow well without any additional watering.

Do not judge a bloom or the number of blooms or scapes on a one year plant, even on a few 2 year clumps judgement should not be made as to the quality of the bloom or the abundance of blooms. The blooming habits, as to quantity vary with each variety, but all make a grand display from 2 to 3 years. Do not divide daylilies after 2, 3 or 4 years if they are blooming good, as they are usually at their best from 2 to 10 years in the same location. Dividing can be made when the plant becomes too crowded in its location and this will be evident by the scarcity of blooms and the tendency of the bloom to become smaller. Divide by washing the earth from the roots with a hose and cutting apart with a kitchen knife into 2 or 3 fan divisions. Spring or right after they bloom is a good time to divide. In most cases a light shifting shade as one finds in an open woodland is an ideal place to plant Daylilies, but they will bloom in half shade, but not quite so abundant, and bloom heaviest in full sun. A few varieties if placed in full sun will burn or wilt a little, especially the first two years, while some of the yellows will have a tendency to scorch if the sun is especially hot. So it would be wise to give some shade to your Daylilies until you will be able to judge their reaction to different locations. Placement will have to be determined by the grower.

Spacing Daylilies 3 feet will take care of future growth of plants, and in the first or second year other perennials or annuals may be used between these plants to fill the gap.

Descriptions are as close as we can make under the circumstances, as weather, soil, and location, (sun or shade) has a direct bearing as to their specific color in your garden. On cloudy days, reds are sometimes darker. Colors are truer on older clumps.

Height indicated is a general average, as some scapes may be shorter, while others will be taller than indicated. You will also experience a truer height on a more established plant, (2 or more years old.)

Season of bloom will vary 2 or more weeks at certain locations, due to the difference in climate.

As to reblooming habits, here at Kansas City we have an average of 6 months of frost free weather, with about 4½ months of 75 degrees or more temperature during the day. Daylilies love hot weather and will not open up well if the days are too cool and especially if it is cloudy. We have possibly 10 varieties that rebloom well here, while possibly over a hundred varieties try to rebloom but perform poorly because of the cool days in the fall. So if you have a 7 to 10 month frost free climate with temperatures above 75 degrees you can expect reblooms on some varieties. The farther south you live from Kansas City, the more varieties you will have to rebloom for you. In the north very few varieties will rebloom satisfactorily due to the cool days and short season. Those of you in the north should rely on the late and late midseason varieties, also use more of the spring bloomers.

MODERN HYBRID DAYLILIES

Our prices in many instances are not only lower, but note the many free extras you get.

FRIENDS:

We believe you sent for our catalog on DAYLILIES because you are looking for something new for your garden. Perhaps you are tired of purchasing supposedly hardy plants, as advertised, only to find that even from reliable growers and dealers you received plants that were not hardy, sulk and then perish. This is good money thrown away. Most people do not have too much time to take care of the plants that they purchase and in planting them, hope that Mother Nature will care for them.

Many gardeners believe that the way they plant their plants is proper, but unless they are familiar with the soil requirements, climatic preferences, etc., they do not usually have too much luck in growing the plants into good specimens, even if they can get them to grow at all.

You might ask us what we have to offer, and we can truthfully say we are offering one of the finest hardy perennials in existence, the DAYLILY, also known by the botanical name Hemerocallis. The Daylily does not grow from a bulb but has thick fleshy roots, and are not to be classed with the lily family, as said before they are hardy perennials.

The name "Daylily", is the popular name for this most beautiful, most dependable hardy perennial. It was formerly known as the Tawny Daylily, Corn Lily, and many other names. Many people call the Hosta, or Funkia, "Daylilies," which is erroneous. The Hosta is now called NIOBE. This confusion of names associated with these plants has been somewhat misleading, and I hope this will help clear up this point. Now through the process of breeding, using ordinary species as collected from various parts of the earth, colors such a one wouldn't dream of, have been brought into existence, and this has happened just during the past few years. This evolution of the DAYLILY from the commonly hated corn lily to one that makes one gasp is truly a miracle of modern plant breeding science. In fact it has become so popular and important that well known Nurseries are planting acres of them. Of more importance which is exciting the imagination of those who grow and know this gorgeous creation is the fact that this is just the beginning of the possibilities of improving this species. There are now about 4000 varieties, of many colors, patterns, heights, sizes of bloom, shapes, seasons of bloom, etc. that the possibilities of a difference of varieties is practically unlimited. The uninitiated in Daylily growing may be confused as to what to order, but the beginner usually starts with the more reasonably priced ones, which are usually older varieties or perhaps kinds which produce new plants faster. Some of these are very beautiful while others might not be just what one expects, but remember the Daylily just like the earlier Iris and other species are always in the process of improvement, so if you want the more spectacular ones we advise you to choose those from the 100 best if confused, also try some of the others priced at $1 or more for a real thrill. The Daylily is now the top contender for the top favorite of the gardening public including among other contenders the Rose, Iris, and Mum. Yes, most Iris, Rose and Mum fans, will eventually become Daylily enthusiasts. Remember the Daylily has a place of honor amongst the best hardy plants, even appearing in colors, in leading garden magazines, and many articles about it is being produced daily. You can have Daylilies bloom from May to frost in most sections and longer in the Southern parts of the country. Each variety has its own blooming season and choices will have to be made personally, as to season desired. There are many gardeners growing Daylilies and once seeing the beauty and dependability of this plant eagerly ordering more. Our sale are doubling each year and we don't see how we can meet the demand if we don't expand, and this is creating a problem for us as we are selling them so fast that we are having a problem in propagating the newer ones. This popularity is one reason why many Nurseries will not ship until August or September because they cannot catch up with the demand.

Of course there is always a surplus of some of the older ones and these are offered at a very low price and are not to be compared with the newer beauties. There is so much to be said about Daylilies that I could write a book about them but of course this would be prohibitive. So hoping that I have answered some of the questions that are constantly asked me I leave you with this reminder. Once a Daylily is established in your garden it will outlive you, yes it will be there for your children and grandchildren, for after all it is the old hardy corn lily, but in a gorgeous new dress of many colors of various shades and patterns. So include a few of these finer, hardier, more colorful, exciting Daylilies in your order for plants knowing that you will be much happier in the years to come with your flower garden. Remember cheap and supposedly hardy plants are expensive in the long run. Order the Daylily once and you need not order the same varieties again, for they last and last for years and years.
